The Outsider: Season One Based on Stephen King's bestselling novel of the same name, The Outsider is a new drama series that follows a seemingly straightforward investigation into the gruesome murder of a local boy. When 11-year-old Frankie Peterson's body is found mutilated in the Georgia woods, police detective Ralph Anderson (Ben Mendelsohn) sets out to investigate – with eyewitnesses and physical evidence pointing to Terry Maitland (Jason Bateman), a popular high school teacher, Little League coach, doting husband and father. While the case appears ironclad, Ralph is baffled by the emergence of contradictory evidence that places his suspect in a neighboring city at the time of the murder. The Sin of Nora Moran Convicted of murder, Nora Moran is facing death by electrocution. As in Kane, Nora's life is shown out of chronology in a series of flashbacks seen from the points of view of some who figured in it and who themselves are revealed as complex and contradictory characters. The scenes are unified with off-screen narration; there is even conversation between Nora and the offscreen storytellers about events and fantasies still in the future. This complex structure gains real emotional impact with some first-rate dialogue, a beautiful score by uncredited Heinz Roemheld, a fine cast of reliable character actors of the time (including unbilled surprise appearances) and a luminous performance by Zita Johann as Nora. When The Sin Of Nora Moran was made, Miss Johan was married to John Houseman, soon to become Orson Welles' partner in the Mercury Theater and a likely conduit for Welles' awareness of this film's unusual design.
